The Everyday Heritage Linkage project explores how different heritage practices can produce different forms of heritage. This symposium will examine methods, tools and approaches that engage with 'everyday heritage', or the values associated with ordinary people and everyday life. It will be of interest to industry practitioners, academics, students and others wishing to learn more about contemporary approaches to heritage from international leaders in this field.

KEYNOTE

Prof Sian Jones, University of Stirling, is an internationally recognised leader in heritage studies who has written extensively on authenticity, social value and on the role of the past in the production of power and identity.
